Earth Day, April 22, marked U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart's commitment to good stewardship of environmental resources and heralded a number of Earth Day themed events in the Stuttgart military community.

In keeping with the Army's Earth Day theme of "Sustain the Mission; Secure the Future," the garrison's activities focused on making better use of resources in accomplishing garrison missions and ensuring future generations understand the importance of good stewardship of natural resources.

On April 22, garrison and host nation officials met in the Panzer Heating Plant to commemorate the completion of a $9.4 million project that replaced Panzer Kaserne's entire heat distribution system and connected it to the Böblingen hot water district heating system. This project is expected to reduce energy usage and save the garrison almost €500,000 yearly.

The USAG Stuttgart Directorate of Public Works' Environmental Division supported the Army's theme through educational activities at several local Department of Defense Dependents schools.

DPW's environmental protection specialists coordinated a tree planting at Robinson Barracks Elementary/Middle School on April 23, along with a hands-on learning event that focused on the natural elements of Earth Day.

The students, ranging from third through sixth grade, rotated through three stations that taught them about soil, emphasizing that clean soil is important for the sustainability of nature, plants, insects and humans.

At the first station, students investigated soil samples using magnifying glasses. Environmental experts also provided information on plants and animals living in the soil.

A man of honor

Commentary by Gen. Mark A. Welsh III
Air Force Chief of Staff

“Anyone can carry his burden, however hard until nightfall; anyone can do his work however hard for one day.”

These words were penned by Robert Louis Stevenson about one hundred years before retired Air Force fighter pilot Col. Jim Kasler used them to describe the challenge of daily life as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

For nearly seven years Kasler carried that burden every day with honor, pride and dignity. He was a remarkable man, an incredible officer and a true American hero. On April 24, 2014, Kasler left the burdens of this world behind. While his legacy is an enduring gift to our Air Force, all Airmen should feel the loss.

I never had the privilege of meeting Kasler, but his military career spans more than three decades of service. It's hard to believe, but when he reported for duty in Vietnam then Maj. Kasler was beginning his third war as an Airman. He is one of a treasured generation who fought three wars and built our Air Force.

As a 19-year-old B-29 Superfortress tail gunner, he flew combat missions over Japan in World War II. Following the war and college, he moved into the cockpit of an F-86 Sabre and served in Korea where he flew 100 combat missions and shot down six MiGs, earning the elite rank of Air Force jet ace.

But it was his final conflict that would prove to be the most challenging.

Soon after arriving in Southeast Asia, Kasler established that his success in Korea would continue in Vietnam by leading a successful strike on a heavily defended petroleum storage facility. So successful, his fellow pilots lauded him as “The Destroyer” for his effectiveness in the F-105 Thunderchief. This strike earned him the Air Force Cross, the first of three.

Not long afterward in 1966, on his 91st mission in Vietnam, Kasler's wingman was hit by ground fire and he ejected. Kasler kept watch over the downed pilot until he was almost out of fuel. On his way back to coordinate the rescue of his wingman after refueling, Kasler's aircraft was hit and he ejected, earning him a second Air Force Cross and the beginning of an incredibly horrible tenure as a prisoner of war when he was captured soon after hitting the ground.

Kasler's third Air Force Cross was awarded for his inconceivable resistance to abuse by the North Vietnamese. He shared the infamous Room 7 of the “Hanoi Hilton” with other great heroes such as retired Brig. Gen. Robbie Risner, retired Navy Vice Adm. James Stockdale, retired Col. Bud Day, retired Navy Capt. and current Arizona Sen. John McCain, retired Col. Larry Guarino and retired Navy Rear Adm. Jeremiah Denton.

Beatings, starvation, sleep deprivation and brainwashing became regular occurrences. The worst of the torture came in the summer of 1968 when his captors attempted to force him to make

The worst of the torture came in the summer of 1968 when his captors attempted to force him to make statements in support of an anti-American propaganda event. He was tortured for six weeks. He was denied sleep for five days straight, beaten every hour on the hour for three days and all the while was fed barely enough food to stay alive.

statements in support of an anti-American propaganda event. He was tortured for six weeks. He was denied sleep for five days straight, beaten every hour on the hour for three days and all the while was fed barely enough food to stay alive.

Eventually he and his fellow POWs learned to face their captors one day at a time, to endure all they could until nightfall, when they could get a few hours of relief. This became the pattern of their lives.

He later said, “Our treatment in Hanoi only strengthened our resistance and our faith in our country and its cause in Southeast Asia... we could have easily compromised our beliefs and made our lives much easier by cooperating with the Vietnamese. But our goal was to return home with our honor.”

He never cooperated with the North Vietnamese and survived to return home in March of 1973 after 6 1/2 years in captivity.

Kasler's service spanned 31 years and three wars. He earned 76 awards for valor and service. In addition to being the only man awarded the Air Force Cross three times, Kasler was decorated twice with the Silver Star, a Legion of Merit, nine awards of the Distinguished Flying Cross, two Bronze Star Medals, two Purple Hearts and 11 Air Medal awards.

But what was most important to him was his honor, and return with honor he did. Those who knew him, say he was a humble man, who never expected to be honored. He believed in family, God and our nation, and he showed us all what courage, sacrifice and honor really look like.

Today's Airmen have a lot to learn from Col. Kasler. His story is an inspiration to persevere, no matter the circumstances they face. Night has fallen for Jim Kasler; he carried his burden exceedingly well, and his Air Force will miss him.

AFRICOM observes World Malaria Day

By Scott Nielsen

U.S. Africa Command Public Affairs

U.S. Africa Command observed World Malaria Day on Kelley Barracks April 25 to help spread awareness of the disease to members of the AFRICOM community.

Crowds gathered around a tent of displays and spoke with experts about the dangers of malaria and how to stay safe from mosquito bites.

The World Health Organization says malaria is endemic in 46 countries in the Sub-Saharan African Region with more than 90 percent of the estimated 300-500 million clinical cases of malaria occurring in Africa.

Navy Capt. David Weiss, the AFRICOM command surgeon, said the event helped highlight the malaria threat in much of the developing world.

"Health is a key component to the security of any nation," he said. "Disease is a major driver of stability for sub-Saharan Africa, and effective malaria programs support peacekeeping operations."

According to the African Union, malaria infection rates among African military personnel hamper the ability of these militaries to participate in peacekeeping operations.

Michele Balihe, a Public Health Command

Region Europe epidemiologist, emphasized the importance of preventative measures while traveling to Africa to avoid contracting the disease.

"It is important to use bug spray and mosquito nets, but also to use the malaria medication correctly. One of the biggest problems is people not taking their malaria medication seriously. There are lots of stories about side effects like crazy dreams or going crazy which are not proven medically. It is best to get medical advice from a medical professional and remember to take your meds," she said.

Michelle Sanders contracted malaria in Togo in 1995 while working for the Peace Corps. She said that she stopped taking her malaria medication because she thought she was safe during the dry season.

"One minute I was fine and then I became delirious," she said. "When I finally came out of my fever, my nurse said I was lucky to be alive."

World Malaria Day was instituted by the World Health Organization member states during the World Health Assembly of 2007. The annual celebration aims to highlight the need for continued investment and sustained political commitment for malaria prevention and control. The theme of this year's World Malaria Day was "Invest in the future. Defeat malaria."

AAFES rewards students who 'make the grade'

Military students can turn good grades into rewards with the Army and Air Force Exchange Service's 'You Made the Grade' program. From first graders to high school seniors, pupils who maintain a B average or higher are eligible for the program that recognizes academic excellence.

The program rewards military students with a coupon booklet filled with free offers and discounts. Students can also enter the You Made the Grade semiannual sweepstakes to receive gift cards worth $2,000, $1,500 or $500.

Students, including those who are home schooled, can receive the coupon booklet by presenting a valid military I.D. and proof of an overall B average at their nearest Exchange customer service area. Eligible students can pick up one coupon booklet for each qualifying report card. Entries for the gift card sweepstakes drawing can be submitted twice a year, with drawings held in June and December.

On the Blotter

April 10

- A family member was caught using an altered military ID card at the Panzer Exchange.
- A service member reported that his iPhone was stolen from the pocket of his jacket while he was traveling in Paris, France.
- Military Police responded to a bomb threat on Kelley Barracks after a service member reported finding a note on his car that read, "Bomb on board, tic-toc, tic-toc ..."

April 11

A service member was stopped for reckless driving after he was seen riding a motorcycle over the pedestrian bridge on Panzer Kaserne. Further investigation revealed that he did not have a U.S. Army Europe motorcycle license and the bike was not registered or insured.

April 15

- Security personnel found a small plastic bag of marijuana in the Panzer Exchange.
- A service member reported that his wallet was stolen from his unlocked vehicle on Panzer Kaserne.

April 16

- A service member's wife reported a domestic assault in their off-post residence after her husband became angry, grabbed her cell phone from her hand, followed her through the house and eventually choked her using the collar of her shirt.
- Military Police observed a vehicle parked on Panzer Kaserne with expired USAREUR plates. The plates were removed on the spot.

- A civilian employee was caught in a routine traffic stop by German police and found to be driving without a valid license and a blood alcohol content of .063 percent.
- A family member was caught shoplifting in the Panzer Exchange after she removed the "tester" sticker from a bottle of perfume, hid the perfume in her purse and left the store.

April 24

A family member was caught stealing a perfume tester from the Panzer Exchange by concealing it in her purse.

April 25

Military Police on Patch Barracks saw a car with expired USAREUR plates, confirmed that the registration was expired, and removed the plates from the vehicle on the spot.

April 26

- A service member and a civilian employee got into a fist fight with each other in the Stuttgart main train station.
- A family member was caught shoplifting from the Panzer Exchange when he removed the tags from a hat and wore it out of the store.

April 27

A service member and his spouse were questioned by police because they began fighting while driving on the autobahn with their three children. The wife reportedly got angry and grabbed the steering wheel of the car, causing it to veer suddenly to the side.

Family and MWR unveils golf course renovations

German and American golfers gather at the Stuttgart Golf Course in Kornwestheim May 10 to celebrate the revamped course following two years of renovations. About $1.8 million was invested to remodel the greens and fairways, and build new walkways throughout the course to give golfers better access. The 18-hole course is run by USAG Stuttgart's Directorate of Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation. The course, built in 1956 as part of the former U.S. Forces housing area Pattonville, spans 300 acres of tree-lined and gently rolling hills. The Stuttgart Golf Course is also home to the German Golfclub Neckartal e.V.

At the next station, students learned about composting and how to make their own compost.

Finally, students learned about the methods used to investigate the human impact to soil and the consequences of contaminated soils. Students conducted tests on soil samples for various factors, such as permeability and pH value.

The environmental protection specialists also presented these leaning activities at Patch Elementary School April 25 and at Böblingen Elementary/Middle School April 29-30.

The Earth Day events will culminate with a school field trip to Bärensee Lake in Stuttgart May 15, a former water reservoir. Patch Elementary School first-graders will learn about drinking water, as well as animal life in the area, and will conduct a clean-up day around the lake.

Jochen Dörr, an outreach specialist with CardnoTEC, demonstrates composting techniques to students at Robinson Barracks Elementary/Middle School during the school's Earth Day activities April 23.

Plan ahead for German holiday May 29

E-cigarettes pose poisoning danger

The number of calls to poison centers involving e-cigarette liquids containing nicotine rose from one per month in September 2010 to 215 per month in February 2014, according to a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention study published in an April 2014 morbidity and mortality weekly report. The number of calls per month involving conventional cigarettes did not show a similar increase during the same time period.

More than half (51.1 percent) of the calls to poison centers due to e-cigarettes involved young children under age 5, and about 42 percent of the poison calls involved people age 20 and older.

The analysis compared total monthly poison center calls involving e-cigarettes and conventional cigarettes, and found the proportion of e-cigarette calls jumped from 0.3 percent in September 2010 to 41.7 percent in February 2014. Poisoning from conventional cigarettes is generally due to young children eating them. Poisoning related to e-cigarettes involves the liquid containing nicotine used in the devices and can occur in three ways: by ingestion, inhalation or absorption through the skin or eyes.

Like any tobacco products or medicines, they should be kept well out of the reach of small children and should not be misused by adults.

In addition to the dangers of poisoning and misuse, even when used as intended, e-cigarettes are not a healthy alternative to smoking according to the CDC.

For information on assistance in quitting tobacco use entirely, call the Army Wellness Center Stuttgart at 430-2997/civ. 0711-680-2997.

Council helps to implement Army's Ready, Resilient Campaign

By Angela Hunter

U.S. Army Public Health Command Europe

The Department of Defense and the Department of the Army have sounded the alarm, and it is a resounding alarm that calls for a new approach to building and protecting the health and well-being of service members, veterans, DOD civilians and their families through advocacy, action planning and partnerships.

Today, health promotion and disease prevention uses a collaborative, multidisciplinary approach to address and resolve the layered and complicated issues of today's military. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, there are four key strategies to preventing chronic diseases and promoting health. The first is investing in communities. Second is providing venues for communities to learn about effective strategies, specifically those related to policy, systems, and environmental changes. Third is mobilizing networks for change. And finally, the fourth is providing communities with tools to assist them as they mobilize to achieve health equity and prevent chronic diseases. Together, these strategies act as powerful change agents to reverse unhealthy behaviors and to promote positive ones.

The Stuttgart Community Health Promotion Council is the community's change agent and the strategic platform for promoting health and preventing disease. The quarterly CHPC meeting provides a holistic approach to improve the health and well-being of the Stuttgart military community through its construct, mission, and operational capabilities. Further, the CHPC supports the Comprehensive Soldier Family Fitness Program, Ready and Resilient Campaign, and the Health Promotion, Risk Reduction, Suicide Prevention mission to enhance performance, increase resilience and reduce high risk behaviors of all community members.

The framework of the CHPC is based on the components of the Army Health Promotion Program and is aligned with the Comprehensive Soldier and Family Fitness Program's dimensions of strength. The social, family, spiritual, emotional, and physical dimensions of strength serve as the CHPC's strategic lines of effort which are operationalized through monthly community work groups.

The collaborative efforts of the Stuttgart CHPC and its work groups have resulted in a number of successes, some of which include the development and implementation of the Stuttgart barracks policy, the elevation of smoking in on-post housing issues to the Department of Army General Officer's Steering Committee, and the improvement of the CHPC infrastructure.

The CHPC also led the development and implementation of the annual Resiliency Day, which was named a best practice by Installation Management Command.

The CHPC, which is supported by command oversight and community input, is effective in addressing complex problems.

Its ability to design and implement unique approaches to resolving community health issues through sound strategy make it a valuable and viable community process. While no process is perfect, the CHPC is a vital link and catalyst to ensure that the community is physically, emotionally and spiritually prepared to perform and support the military mission.

For more information on the Stuttgart Community Health Promotion Council, contact Angela Hunter, USAG Stuttgart Health Promotion Officer, at Angela.m.Hunter32@civ.mail.mil.

By Maj. Lakisha Flagg

U.S. Army Public Health Command

Every day, service members are reminded of the importance of readiness.

Readiness is essential to the success of the force, and it is one way to ensure that every service member is fit to fight at all times. Maintaining technical and tactical proficiency is critical to readiness, but without good health, service members are incapable of functioning at the level necessary to succeed in their profession. Health screenings help them to prevent illness and to stay in good health.

May 11-17 is National Women's Health Week. While male and female service members share some basic health requirements for readiness, female service members require health screenings that are unique to the health of women. These requirements include cervical cancer screenings, also known as the Pap smear or Pap test, and breast cancer screenings. These tests provide women with the opportunity to detect diseases, such as cancer, in the early stages, often before symptoms occur. By making sure that routine cervical cancer screenings are completed, women can help increase the likelihood that abnormal findings are detected and treated early.

A breast cancer screening is another way to detect cancer promptly to ensure that breast cancer is detected in the early stages. Like most cancers, breast cancer is easiest to treat when is detected early, and early detection improves the chances that this cancer can be diagnosed at an early stage and treated successfully.

In addition to these health screenings, female service members should also consider the three critical components of personal health when working to enhance their readiness. These components are sleep management, activity and nutrition.

Although these are basic actions that are sometimes taken for granted, they are essential to readiness. Routine physical activity will not only improve readiness but it can also reduce stress, strengthen the heart and lungs, increase energy levels, and improve mood. Quality nutrition and sleep management are equally important as they promote overall health, help prevent disease and achieve or maintain a healthy body weight. When these critical components are missing, female service members are at an increased risk for stroke, cardiovascular disease, diabetes and obesity. We think better, feel better and perform better when our bodies are well nourished, well rested and healthy.

The Army surgeon general, a woman, has developed the Performance Triad to educate not just female Soldiers, but all Soldiers and retirees, their family members, and Army civilians about how quality sleep, activity and improved nutrition can help us all reach our full potential.

More information about women's health and health screening is available on the U.S. Army Public Health Command's Women's Health Portal at <http://phc.amedd.army.mil>. For information about the Performance Triad visit <http://phc.amedd.army.mil>.

Hearing, Speech Month brings awareness to communication disorders

U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart
Public Affairs Office

May is National Better Hearing and Speech Month. Sponsored by the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association since 1927, this annual observance provides opportunities to raise awareness about communication disorders and to promote treatment that can improve the quality of life for those who experience problems with speaking, understanding or hearing.

Communication disorders include hearing loss, tinnitus (a sensation of a ringing, roaring, or buzzing sound in the ears or head), and stuttering.

This year's Better Hearing and Speech Month theme is, "Helping People Communicate."

More than 400,000 post-9/11 veterans have suffered hearing loss and tinnitus. While there is no cure for noise-induced hearing loss or tinnitus, there are treatments available for both.

Hearing loss resulting from hazardous noise exposure is permanent, however, and there are many communication techniques that can be useful in difficult listening situations. Try:

- Instructing your conversational partner – Ask the talker to change the delivery (slow down, uncover your mouth, face me).
- Use close-ended questions –

Phrase remarks to constrain the verbal response (Would you like water, tea or juice?).

- Set yourself up for success – Optimize the listening environment for communication (move to where it is quiet and well-lit).
- Go easy on yourself – Relax, breathe deeply.
- Anticipate – Observe situational cues, make predictions about the message or the speaker's style.

For more information, contact your local military treatment facility or visit the Army Hearing Program, U.S. Army Public Health Command website at <http://phc.amedd.army.mil>.

Cpl. Khoa Pelczar

Preventing hearing loss through hearing protection and early detection of any hearing loss are the best practices to preserve hearing.

U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart recognized its outstanding volunteers April 24 during a yearly volunteer recognition ceremony at Patch Community Club.

In 2013, 425 volunteers contributed at least 10 hours or more of volunteer work for a total of 77,330 hours. This equates to a cost savings of $1,712,086.20 to the garrison last year, according to Andy Mueller, the USAG Stuttgart Army Volunteer Corps Program manager.

Volunteers are absolutely vital to the Stuttgart military community and make outstanding contributions in a number of areas, according to Col. John P. Stack, the U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart commander, who also pointed out the hard work and devotion the volunteers exemplify.

“After working all day, after taking care of the household, after getting the kids to soccer and picking them up again — even with all of that — they spend their limited time making their community even better,” said Stack. “Now that’s selfless service.”

Volunteers were recognized for their efforts in youth activities, student volunteering, community outreach and other areas.

Commander’s Volunteer of Excellence awards were presented those who donated more than 1,000 hours in 2013. Shannon Carlton, Roswitha Cook, Gudrun Kaper, Susan Tipton and Marine Chief Warrant Officer 3 Timothy Ward, assigned to Marine Forces Europe/Africa, received this award.

Volunteers of the Year awards were presented in five categories. Volunteers were nominated by an organization they volunteered for, and were selected by a panel of judges.

Youth Volunteer of the Year was shared by two sibling teams, Candace and Camille Carson, and Troy and Miesha Blue.

Other Volunteers of the Year were: Melissa Kreitzer, Civilian Volunteer of the Year Theresa Amblad, Spouse Volunteer of the Year Marine Chief Warrant Officer 3 Timothy Ward, Military Volunteer of the Year David Gouin, Military Retiree Volunteer of the Year

Thrills on wheels: Check out Germany's theme parks

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

School is almost out and you may be wondering how to amuse the kids. Before boredom settles in with those dog days of summer, check out Germany's take on amusement parks. From an afternoon spent with Shrek to a Lego lover's paradise, these fantasy worlds will satisfy thrill-seekers of all ages and tastes.

Movie Park Germany

Explore Bikini Bottom, take a wild water ride with Dora the Explorer and meet SpongeBob for an afternoon of fishing at Movie Park Germany. This park, in Bottrop-Kirchhellen, features characters from Nickland, "Ice Age" and "Shrek," as well as from other movies and television shows. In the Wild West section of the park, saloons and barber shops create a replica of a Hollywood movie set.

The park also includes several shows, such as the "Shadows of Darkness -The Van Helsing Show" and "Back to the Movies," where visitors can travel back in time to experience movie highlights of the past decade.

Entrance prices run from €29 for children ages 4-11 and €35 for adults.

For more information, including extended opening times and prices, visit www.movieparkgermany.de.

ture, landscaping, food, shopping and attractions of the country it represents; visitors can ride a London bus in England, or face Poseidon on a water ride in Greece.

The park is home to 10 roller coasters, including one of Europe's highest and largest, the "Silver Star." The park also offers musical, laser and ice shows, and a 4D cinema.

The park's newest addition is "Arthur in the Minimoy's Kingdom," where three themed areas are transformed into an adventurous journey through nature where visitors will "feel like the brave hero Arthur in the world of Minimoy's," according to Europa Park's website, www.europapark.de.

tourist destination with 100 different attractions. Tripsdrill offers water slides, carousels, dancing tea cups and more.

The "Vinarium," or wine cellar, and wine museum, where visitors can taste local wines, symbolizes the park's main theme: wine production. After tasting the wines, visitors can also take a spin in the "Lustige Weinberg," a vineyard keg ride.

The main attractions, however, are the "Mammoth" roller coaster, the largest wooden roller coaster in Germany, and a wild water rafting tour.

For those who want to take a break from the crowds, a 47-acre wildlife park is located next to the amusement park.

Entrance fees start at €23 for children age 4-11 and €27 for adults.

For more information, visit www.tripsdrill.de.

Legoland Germany

More than 50 million individual Lego blocks were used to build Legoland Germany. Rides and attractions, as well as one of the largest Lego stores in Germany, await visitors.

One of the latest attractions is the "Tempel X-pedition" ride at Legoland's Pharaoh Empire theme park. Visitors can experience an adventurous ride through the darkness during an interactive treasure hunt.

Tickets cost €36 for children ages 3-11 and €40.50 for adults, but visitors can save money by booking online.

Stuttgart service members visit Dachau Concentration

Story by Carola Meusel

USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office

On April 25, 82 service members stationed in U.S. Army Garrison Stuttgart visited a former concentration camp in Dachau, Bavaria. The trip was organized by USAG Stuttgart's Equal Opportunity and Religious Support offices as part of the Days of Remembrance observance held April 27 to May 4.

The Days of Remembrance were established by Congress as the nation's annual commemoration of the Holocaust, according to the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum website. The museum, which serves as a permanent living memorial to the victims, designated "Confronting the Holocaust: American Responses" as the theme for this year's observance.

The Holocaust was the systematic, bureaucratic, state-sponsored persecution and murder of approximately six million Jews by the Nazi regime and its collaborators, according to the USHMM website.

The Dachau visit, an EO initiative, was the first time the office has offered a field trip to service members, according to Sgt. 1st Class Juan Carlos Adorno, the garrison's equal opportunity advisor.

"I really wanted to visit a concentration camp as part of the observance, since we are in Germany," Adorno said.

"Events like this are important to educate service members. Seeing a camp [like Dachau] touches people in a more personal sense since they can see what the Holocaust did," Adorno said. "People have to learn and share their knowledge with others as a constant reminder. We're hoping for our service members that their experience can carry to others within the Stuttgart military community."

The trip was funded by the RSO from offerings collected from the various congregations in the community, according to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Steven Jerles, the garrison's deputy command chaplain.

Before the group took off, Col. John P. Stack, garrison commander, encouraged service members to think about the role of a concentration camp during the Nazi era and what led humans to go to these extremes.

"I ask you to reflect on these questions while touring Dachau, discuss with fellow comrades and share information," Stack said.

Before departing, several service members said they were eager to visit Dachau.

Sgt. Walter De Gregoris, with American Forces Network Stuttgart, said he studied history and always wanted to see a concentration camp while stationed in Germany.

"I read so many books about the Holocaust and sat through seminars. Being able to see a concentration camp in real time will be quite an experience," De Gregoris said.

Sgt. Nancy Guillaume, with Marine Forces Europe/Africa, said she wanted to take the opportunity to learn more about the Holocaust after a recent visit to the Holocaust Memorial Museum in the District of Columbia.

"Personally, I think touring the site is important to remind people about what happened during the Holocaust," Guillaume said.

Originally, Dachau was built for political prisoners and was activated March 22, 1933, less than two months after Adolf Hitler's election as Reich Chancellor on Jan. 30.

According to Christian Gertz, a tour guide at the Dachau Concentration Camp, the site served as a model for all future camps under the Nazi regime and as a training site for the Schutzstaffel SS, a defense corps under Hitler and the Nazi Party.

Gertz explained the difference between concentration and extermination camps: Concentration camps were forced labor camps where prisoners had to perform agricultural and factory work. Later, they also served as transit and prisoner of war camps. Extermination, or death camps, such as Auschwitz-Birkenau, were built to mass murder Jews in gas chambers in support of the Nazi regime's "Final Solution," meaning an annihilation of the Jewish people.

In 1942, a gas chamber was built in Dachau, but was never used, according to Gertz.

"Dachau was built to intimidate people, but a lot of the prisoners didn't survive the intimidation," Gertz said.

Prisoners died from illnesses, starvation and exhaustion caused by catastrophic and unsanitary living conditions, or by mass shootings, torture and medical experiments. Overall, 41,500 were murdered in Dachau.

In Dachau, more than 200,000

Prisoners entered the Dachau Concentration Camp through an iron gate at the "Jourhouse," and later marched through the gate with their respective labor units. On the gate it reads: "Arbeit macht frei," or "Work will set you free." The motto was part of the Nazi regime's propaganda to market the camp as a labor and reeducation camp.

Originally, Dachau was built for political prisoners and was activated March 22, 1933, less than two months after Adolf Hitler's election as Reich Chancellor on Jan. 30. The Dachau Concentration Camp served as a model for all future camps under the Nazi regime and as a training site for the Schutzstaffel SS, a defense corps under Hitler and the Nazi Party.

Concentration Camp during Days of Remembrance people from 34 nations were imprisoned between 1933 and 1945. The first prisoners were political opponents of the regime, such as communists and socialists. The first Jewish prisoners were sent to Dachau because of their political sentiment.

In the following years, other groups were deported to the camp: Roma (gypsies), disabled, prostitutes, criminals, homosexuals and Jehovah's Witnesses. Following the "Reichskristallnacht, or the "Night of Broken Glass," Nov. 9, 1938, more than 10,000 Jews were sent to Dachau.

Between 1938 and 1939, Austrian, Sudeten German, and Czech prisoners followed. With the beginning of World War II in 1939, allied prisoners of war from Poland, Norway, Belgium, the Netherlands and France, were sent to Dachau. The largest group was formed by the Poles followed by prisoners of the Soviet Union, according to the KZ Gedenkstätte Dachau website, www.kz-gedenkstaette-dachau.de.

On April 29, 1945, American troops liberated the survivors.

The memorial site on the former camp grounds was established in 1965, and rearranged between 1996 and 2003 to illustrate the "Path of the Prisoners" that began at Dachau's train station and was followed by a forced march to the camp, according to Gretz, the tour guide.

Information displays along the path provide historic information about the camp and its development between 1937 and 1938. The prisoners were housed in a former ammunition factory, a relic of World War I, before they began to build the camp as it stands today. Its augmentation was the consequence of the plan to establish concentration camps as permanent institutions of the Nazi state, according to the KZ Gedenkstätte Dachau website.

Once entering the site, visitors can see what life was like throughout displays, photographs and a 20-minute movie screening at the exhibition area located in the former maintenance building. The building used to house a kitchen, laundry, and bath rooms, and the "Schubraum," where newly arrived prisoners were registered. This was a vicious procedure during which prisoners were forced by SS guards to undress and give up all their personal belongings.

Some of the other originally preserved buildings include the "Jourhouse," that served as the main entrance/exit to the camp and housed offices of SS guards, the "Bunker," or former camp prison, crematorium and watchtowers.

Stuttgart service members were horrified by seeing what the prisoners had to go through.

"It was instant sadness, and I didn't want to take any pictures. We all know about what happened, but actually being here feels very different from reading about it in books," said Tech. Sgt. Andrea Lindsey of Special Operations Command Europe.

Senior Master Sgt. Brent Harrison, with Defense Information Systems Agency Europe, said he wanted to come to Dachau ever since he arrived in Germany.

"Touring the site felt extremely sad and depressing. It's hard to believe that people did this to other people," Harrison said.

The international monument designed by the Yugoslavian artist and concentration camp survivor Nandor Glid is located at the roll-call square, where prisoners used to be counted mornings and evenings.

Some 34 barracks originally made for 254 prisoners, but at times holding more than 2,000, used to stand along the camp road that runs from the monument to the religious memorial site and crematorium.

Today, two replicas and the foundations of the remaining barracks are displayed. The Mortal Agony of Christ Chapel, the Protestant Church of Reconciliation, the Jewish Memorial and the Russian-Orthodox Chapel make up the religious memorial site.

Petty Officer 1st Class Dee Brown with DISA Europe considered the visit to Dachau an educational experience.

"People always talk about the Holocaust and mass murdering of the Jewish people. Being here, I also learned about all the other individuals affected [by the Nazi terror] who lost their lives in concentration camps," Brown said.

"The world has to look up in order for something like this to never happen again," Brown said.

Introducing Local Businesses

Krug Antiques

Located in Schönaich, a small village by Panzer Kaserne, is a wonderful antique store run by mother and daughter called Krug Antiques. Krug Antiques has been in business for over 40 years spanning two generations. They have two buildings, one of which is a three story structure jam packed with everything imaginable. It is a great place to browse and you will feel like you are on a real treasure hunt as you roam the three floors with their different rooms and alcoves, and if you want to browse even more, you still have their other building. Krug Antiques specializes in buying large estates and their expertise will help you find that special piece, whether it's an antique clock, a dresser, a shrank, a painting, candle holders, lamps, or whatever, there is something for everyone. Mastercard and Visa are accepted. All shops open in Schönaich Sat May, 24 & Sun May, 25. Krug Antiques hours will be Sat 10 a.m. – 6 p.m. & Sun 2 – 5 p.m.
