- Below you will find helpful guidance for any Service Members that may require financial support during the government shutdown.
- The Air Force, Navy-Marine Corps and Army aid societies highly encourage households to seek assistance first from their financial institutions.
- Some financial institutions are offering assistance programs:
 - Navy Federal Credit Union will allow eligible members to enroll in its Paycheck Assistance Program.
 - USAA is offering no-interest loans and special insurance payment arrangements.
 - First Command offers qualifying customers interest-free pay advance loans and penalty-free early CD withdrawals.
 - PenFed Credit Union offers its affected members zero-interest loans covering a paycheck.
 - Andrews Federal Credit Union has short-term loans, penalty-free early withdrawals from Share Certificates and counseling available to its affected members.
- Major commercial banks are not currently offering financial relief programs. But if the shutdown lasts a long time, it may be worth checking again — during the last shutdown, Wells Fargo, Bank of America, Chase and Citi offered some assistance.
- The Air Force Aid Society is not currently accepting applications for assistance directly related to the shutdown as Oct. 1 paychecks were still issued, according to a notice posted on its website. But if the shutdown continues to the point that Oct. 15 paychecks are disrupted, AFAS will issue new guidance. Its normal application process continues as normal.
- The Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society does not have a special program for those affected by the shutdown, but its offices will be open during normal hours to assist those affected.
- Army Emergency Relief says it will provide zero-interest loans in the event the Oct. 15 paycheck is disrupted, equivalent to the amount of one net paycheck up to a maximum of $6,000. Soldiers who believe they will be in financial distress if they do not receive pay on Oct. 15 or later are advised to create an account and apply online.
- Coast Guard Mutual Assistance is offering an interest-free loan that covers up to one month of Basic Allowance for Housing.
- If Service Members experience financial hardship after October 15th due to the government shutdown, they are highly encouraged to speak to their chain of command in order to seek guidance
